

My Dear Valentine,

It was probably fifth or sixth grade when St. Valentines Day started being important to me. I remember giving out the little valentines cards in earlier grades but those cards went out to everyone in the class. No apprehension, no fear of rejection. When you're eleven or twelve you start thinking about the possibility of actually kissing a girl and it not being yucky. Well, that's the way it was for me. How about having your friends find out if the girl you like likes you. You ask your friend, he asks her friend, she asks the girl you're interested in and then the information starts coming back. Not straight back, somehow it takes a turn and goes through the whole school before it gets back to you. Sending her a note, if you like me check this box. If you don't like me burn the note and erase this incident from your memory. How awkward those years were. I remember my older children going through the Valentines Day trauma and my younger ones are still going through it. It amazing how little has changed from the time I was twelve and now. My youngest child is twelve and he and his friends have the same procedures for obtaining important relationship information that I had. I'm glad that these things haven't changed much. It's just fine that we take the time and precaution to make sure the one we like also likes us. This is when we learn that our behavior determines what others think of us. That your actions most times speak louder than your words.

So to my Dear Valentine, Victoria.

Love, Jim
